YOUR RESULTS

About 9 in 10 routine cervical screening tests are normal. If the result is negative (normal) then you will be invited for your next smear in 3 years if you are under 50 years old, or in 5 years if you are over 50 years old.

If the result is negative, but you are being followed up from previous abnormalities, then you will be invited to attend in 6 or another 12 months.

In 1–2% of ladies the sample may be reported as 'INADEQUATE' and you will need to return for your smear test to be repeated in 3 months. It can mean there were not enough cells gathered for them to test. It is NOT an indication of an abnormality.

WHAT IF IT'S AN ABNORMAL RESULT?

1 in 10 tests show some abnormality. If your test shows an abnormality it is important to remember that it is VERY RARE for these abnormalities to be cancer.

Some abnormal changes are quite common. They often return to normal on their own and most mild changes do not progress to anything serious.

However, any changes need to be monitored as some may progress to become more serious in the future. Currently, cervical screening tests showing borderline or mild abnormality will be tested for Human Papilloma Virus (HPV).

HPV is a common virus which approximately 80% of women will have been exposed to at some point in their sexually active lives.

It rarely causes any symptoms and most women will be unaware they have had it as the body's immune system will have cleared it.

However some persistent strains of HPV have been linked to cervical cancer and this is why HPV testing is so beneficial.

FOLLOW UP

If HPV is found on the cervical screening test a referral to the Colposcopy Clinic will be automatically made.

A colposcopy is a simple examination of the cervix using a colposcope (large magnifying glass). It is usual to take a small piece of the tissue from the cervix (biopsy) to make a more detailed assessment of the cells.

You will be sent an appointment by post to your home address along with more detailed assessment about the clinic test.

IT IS VERY IMPORTANT THAT YOU ATTEND YOUR RECOMMENDED FOLLOW UP.
